What Is Going On Tonight.
Katharine Lodge, No. 22, Knights of Pythias meets at 8:07 street.

Both the republican and democratic parties are preparing themselves for the bi-annual city election, Monday, December 6th, when a mayor, three aldermen at large, a city clerk, city treasurer, sheriff, two auditors and three assessors will be elected by several votes, and four aldermen by ward voting.

It is claimed that the big battle will be over about the office of mayor, and that Thomas D. Dyer, the democratic candidate, will give Mayor Charles A. Gates, republican, a tussle at the polls. The four ward voting places have been announced as follows: First Ward, shop in rear of No. 20 Walnut street; Second Ward, old town hall on Church street; Third Ward, shop at No. 45 Jackson street; Fourth Ward, building in rear of No. 114 Pleasant street. The vote this year will be heavier than in years previous as for the first time in the history of Willimantic women will have the ballot in a city election. The annual city meeting is planned for Tuesday, the 6th, when reports of the city officials will be received and passed upon. The details of estimate of expenses for the ensuing year will also be read and put to the vote of the electors.

Robert Casey, Clarence Mathies, Harold Nagle, Edward Mcweeney, Joseph Shanks, and John Healey are to enjoy a noon supper at South Coventry this (Monday) evening with several of their friends. The 20 noon supper was the last of the kind, the only one of the kind to make a successful shot.

Joseph H. McCarthy, Jr., of the U. S. merchant marine is at home for an indefinite leave. He has been gone since last March, assigned to the U. S. S. Oregon and has visited Africa, Mediterranean ports, the Caucasus and points in France and Germany.

The attention of sportsmen and bird observers in this section is being called to three inquiries, with a view to a positive confirmation, which have been sent to Jewett City during the past week by Edward Home Forbush, director of the division of ornithology for the state of Massachusetts.

"Do you know of any creditable evidence to sustain the ancient belief that wood ducks or any other ducks that nest in hollow trees sometimes carry their young from nest to nest? And if so, how were the young birds carried?"

The second question:

Have you known any surface-feeding duck, swan, or goose to dive? If so, what species and under what circumstances?"

The third question:

Have you known any diving duck to cling, when wounded, to an object on the bottom multi, instead of swimming when, where and what species?"

The first and last questions have received positive answers. The following note sent to Mr. Forbush by a Jewett City man applies to each question:

Dear Sir: Relative to your question about a wounded diving duck, I am able to give you positive information. Ten years ago, quite large flocks of black ducks, Anas R. L., used to come into Taopole pond, a mile above the town. Just as dusk was coming on, to feed.

One evening two other hunters and myself were there in a flat-bottomed skiff. My friend Bennett shot at a lone duck swimming. The duck dove and the duck dove and failed to come up. We paddled to the spot, the water was not above three feet deep and the duck could be seen distinctly clinging to the bottom. I took an oar and pushed the duck. The duck then floated to the surface, dead, with the lily stems still in its mouth.

The first question also gets an answer from an ardent bird lover. A close observer, having extended over a period of more than fifty years. He will say in his letter that he has personally seen a witness to the carrying of the wood duck's fledglings by the mother, from the nest in the broken top of a hollow stub to the water, twelve feet below, and that she carried each little duckling by the mouth. But this is the only trip of the sort that he has seen, when once in the water they have said goodbye to the nest for good.

G. W. Burleigh tells of a brood of nine wood ducks that, in this case had hatched, dropped to the water from their nest in a partly submerged scrub-oak. The first night they sat, with their mother, all clustered together beneath the cedar boughs. After sunrise next morning they started for the open water.

Mr. Burleigh says, "I saw them sail out through the weeds toward the channel. The old one seemed to be feeding them on some sort of water bugs. One of them got quite as strong as the others, was carried a considerable distance down the channel. The old duck, being busy with the other eight did not seem to notice this trouble. When he was perhaps fifty feet away from the rest of the brood, there was a great splash, and

The chick suddenly disappeared under the water. The old duck heard the splash. She glanced suspiciously around, seemed to miss one of her brood, and at once swam along to where a bubble or two struggled up to the surface of the stream. Turning her head down, she looked into the water, eagerly scanning the depths below, then going back gathered the chicks together, and hurried toward the shore, as if apprehending further danger. But what sort of a creature had pulled down the little duckling to "reunions?" concluded that it was a muskrat which had his mud-house over on the other bank, and watching my chance, sent a ball through the creature just as he was getting up on the roof of his house to enjoy the afternoon sun.

Without a single sound or complaint, the poor little victim rolled off into the water, and floated down the current. The next morning the old duck had forgotten her loss. She again took her brood out into the stream. There were eight of them. Something drew my attention from them for a few minutes. When I looked again there were but seven. I began to feel quite curious. Just then I had dealt to the muskrat. Poor fellow! Killed on mere suspicion. Then I surmised it to have been a snake. I searched about the banks for twenty rods for water snakes, and saw several sunning themselves on old tree trunks, but neither of them seemed the criminal for whom I was in search.

Once again, next morning the brood went to the water. The ducks were all looking a little sullen, and another was gone. Something black glided up from the surface of the stream. It was smartly done. I believed it a fish. If a fish, why not dash for it? An idea occurred to me, the day before I had stumbled upon a partridge nest, containing a dozen or more little chicks just hatched. I caught one little fellow, then tied two about necks, and lured them to the end of which was a stout hook attached to a string. I tied on the little partridge chick, attached a cork to keep him afloat and carefully paddled to a point above the spot. The little chick fluttered and splashed as the current bore it down and away. The cork kept it up. There were no bites. I drew in the line and tried again, and again it floated past on the sluggish stream, but on the third try they came the same quick splash. Instantly the line tightened with a jerk and held. There was a great pulling and tug and fro, accompanied by a waving motion of the water. I tied the line to a nearby sapling and paddled out into the stream, but before I came eye the spot a large brown-black creature floated up to the surface, half drowned. It was a wood-stored female otter.

MAHATMAS GANDHI ASSUMES BLAME FOR INDIAN REVOLT
Bombay, Nov. 20 (By The A. P.)—In the statement issued yesterday, Mahatma Gandhi, leader of the "non-co-operationists," deprecating the disturbances which occurred on the occasion of the arrival in India of the Prince of Wales, declared that it was impossible to describe the agony he had suffered during "the past two days, whose events stunk in my nostrils."

Gandhi emphasized that the Mussulmans ought to be grateful to the Parsees for their liberal contributions to the Caliphate fund. Instead, he declared, the Parsees had been victims of attack. In his statement Gandhi invited both Hindus and Mussulmans to go home and repent and to implore God for forgiveness. He insisted that reparation should be made to those who had been injured.

Finally Gandhi blamed himself for having instigated the spirit of revolt and announced that he would refuse to eat or to drink anything but water until peace is restored.

40,000 ACRES TOBACCO WERE PLANTED IN NEW ENGLAND
Waldenfield, Mass., Nov. 20.—New England growers planned 40,000 acres of tobacco this year. A report tonight by V. A. Sanders, federal crop statistician, showed that 45 per cent. of the total was in Hartford county, Connecticut. The total acreage by states was: Connecticut 39,505, Massachusetts 10,130, New Hampshire 171, and Vermont 102.

No comparative figures for previous years were given on the total acreage, but a steady gain in acreage of shade grown tobacco was noted in the Connecticut valley, the figures mounting from 3,800 acres in 1915 to 5,917 in 1917 and 7,121 in 1921.

The relative amounts of Havana and broad leaf demanded by the trade are of primary importance to growers and dealers alike," the report said. "Real inpartly runs in the ratio Havana 70-65, broad leaf 30-35. It is known that Connecticut growers in 1921 shifted heavily from Havana to broad leaf. Massachusetts broad leaf with the last year or two has been relatively unimportant, but in 1921 there is 22 per cent. as much broad leaf as Havana."

ANNIVERSARY OF "BLOODY SUNDAY" OBSERVED IN DUBLIN
Dublin, Nov. 20.—(By The A. P.)—The anniversary of "Bloody Sunday" was celebrated today in many of the churches by masses for the repose of the souls of the victims. There was a procession which paraded the square of the city and then went to Glasnevin cemetery to decorate the graves of those who fell during the disorders.

It was one year ago today when a number of military men and auxiliary police officers were killed during the morning hours and there were reprisals during the afternoon at a football game in Croke Park, where there were numerous casualties. It was also on the day a year ago that three Irish prisoners were shot and killed while endeavoring to make their escape from Dublin Castle.

MASSSES FOR SOULS OF "BLOODY SUNDAY" VICTIMS
London, Nov. 20.—Masses for the repose of the souls of McKee, Clancy and Clancy, who were killed in Dublin on "Bloody Sunday," while endeavoring to escape from Dublin Castle, were said today in the church of Corpus Christi. All members of the Irish delegation attended, except Michael Collins, who is spending the week-end in Dublin.

BULGARIA TO ADMIT 7,000 MORE RUSSIAN REFUGEES
